

S2 Pupils Have Fun With ‘Stealing’

By Cameron-lee Griffiths, Chloe Hunter and Cerys Whyte

A S2 class have been adopting a very different approach to studying poetry. They have been exploring the ideas of Carol Ann Duffy’s poem ‘Stealing’ through the medium of drama. Before putting the play together, as a class they read the poem and worked out characters, props and costumes. They also had to work out why the main character committed the crimes he/she did and then took all the information they had deduced from the thief’s life and turned into a play. English Teacher, Dorothy Ross said: “The class came up with some fantastic plays. Some were serious while others were humorous”. Ellie Stone, one of the pupils involved said: “It went well, there wasn’t any pressure and it was a great way to study a poem”.
